Dawn Education Expo ends with steady crowds, mixed impressions

Students, parents explore local and international study options on second day of event

By Waqas Ali Ranjha

KARACHI: The second and final day of the two-day 21st Dawn Education Expo ended on Sunday at the Pearl Continental Hotel, where a sizable number of students and parents arrived to seek guidance about study options abroad and in Pakistan.

Throughout the day, stalls representing local and international universities remained engaged as visitors explored degree programmes, scholarships and admission options. Most of the participants described the event as a valuable platform for counselling. Representatives at various stalls were of the view that although the footfall fluctuated, the level of genuine interest by visitors remained strong.

A representative at the stall of the University of Warwick said the number of visitors was slightly lower than expected but the quality was encouraging. “Most of the students who came were serious, well-prepared and genuinely interested in understanding their options,” she told Dawn. “I believe that in events like these, quality matters more than quantity, and in that sense, the expo was successful.”

Saad Hasan from Queen Mary University of London shared a similar view. He said that around 60 per cent of the students who approached their stall were genuinely exploring opportunities abroad. “Those who came with specific questions made the interaction meaningful,” he said.

As the event neared its closing hours on the last day, Zeeshan Uqaili and his son, Muhammad Uqaili, were debating whether to approach a representative from a Russian institute.

The elder Uqaili shared with Dawn that the expo had helped them narrow down their priorities. “We mainly wanted clarity on what options my son will have after his A levels. We found the Irish universities’ stall particularly helpful because their representatives explained programme structures and scholarship routes clearly,” he said.

Some other visitors showed similar sentiment. They were of the view that the expo helped them form a clearer picture of future academic possibilities.

Mubashir and Sadeem, final year students from Muhammad Ali Jinnah University, shared that many stalls were unable to provide specific and practical information. “Most representatives only offered us general details and asked us to visit their offices later,” Mubashir said.

“We wanted to know which universities were offering what programmes and scholarships, especially for Pakistani students, but many couldn’t guide us properly,” Sadeem told Dawn.

But, according to them, the Irish and German stalls were exceptions. “At the Irish booth, different universities had their own representatives, so they explained programmes and scholarships precisely. The German stalls were also good at better guiding us,” Mubashir added.

Despite mixed experiences, however, many visitors described the expo as a worthwhile opportunity to explore global study pathways, gather information and make more informed decisions about their academic futures.

it sound anti-religious, whereas ‘secular’ is not necessarily ‘anti-religious,” he pointed out.

“So many times, civilisations have really moved themselves higher in intellectual and cultural terms through translations. So, between the 8th and 10th centuries, in the Muslim context, a huge amount of work from India, Persia, Graeco-Roman, etc., was translated into Arabic, which really helped bring the Golden Age of Muslims intellectually. And then in the 13th and 14th centuries, much of the Arabic philosophy was translated into Latin, which helped bring the Renaissance and other developments there,” he said, pointing to the importance of translations.

While speaking about translanguaging, Dr Dar said that it is a unified force. “It is a unified linguistic repertoire that is present in a child’s mind, which helps the child understand concepts,” she said.

“What we do in our classrooms across the board is to try to make understanding intelligible in a language that they understand. Languages should work in companionship and not in competition. That is what translanguaging is asking us to do,” she said.

While discussing some success stories in translanguaging, Mr Baloch mentioned TCF’s Mother Tongue Based Multilingual Education programme, which makes a child’s journey into school easier.

“We cannot deny the importance of English as a language and as a tool for success and higher education because our system of higher education is offered in English,” he said.

“This is a reality. But the other reality is that when a child comes to school, he or she has a strong connection to his or her mother tongue. Generally, our school systems are based on the belief that a child joining a school knows nothing, and it is their duty to teach them.

“What our programme does is ease the child’s school journey by offering early childhood education to a child in his or her own mother tongue. Then, there is a properly designed transition from the mother tongue to English happening from class three to class seven. After that, the medium of instruction shifts to English in class eight. By then, the student has proficiency in the mother tongue, the national language and the foreign language,” he explained.

HIV found in children previously treated at hospital in SITE an official at the Valika Hospital confirmed that screening for AIDS was underway at the facility while some children had been found to be HIV-positive. However, the officer did not disclose the exact number of affected children.

The government authorities, however, have rejected any such adverse impression.

Dr Kanwal Mustafa, Additional Director HIV/AIDS, Communicable Disease Control (CDC), Sindh Health Department, claimed that her institution responded immediately and set up an anti-retroviral therapy (ART) centre at the same health facility under the question.

“We are further expanding access to HIV treatment and care services in that area,” she added.

Other than recent reported cases at the Valika Hospital, she claimed that a “comprehensive approach” was being taken by the health department, CDC-1 HIV/AIDS Sindh, to tackle HIV/AIDS, focusing on both treatment and prevention.

A total of 31 ART centres have been established across Sindh, offering free counselling, diagnostics and prophylaxis services to HIV-positive individuals, including pregnant women and their children, she added.

When asked about the possible cause of the recent outbreak among the children who were treated at the Valika Hospital, she said “Facts and data are still being analysed”.

She referred to common practices that usually cause such viruses to spread.

“HIV transmission in Pakistan, whether urban or rural, is a complex issue driven by several factors,” said Dr Kanwal.

“Unlicensed practitioners reusing syringes and IV drips play a major role in the spread of the virus. Unregulated blood banks further exacerbate the issue, while widespread illiteracy and poverty create an environment conducive to the transmission of viruses.”

Despite the risks associated with injections, many Pakistanis believe that injections offer a quick relief, driving their widespread use, she added.

“Quackery in our society and high-risk behaviour among drug users compound the problem. Pakistan’s high anaemia prevalence among children under five also increases the likelihood of blood transfusions, heightening the risk of HIV acquisition,” she said.

The government-led investigations may take time to uncover the truth behind the recent HIV outbreak among children of SITE Town, but Vice Chairman of the UC Irshad Khan’s personal observations paint a dangerous scenario.

“During our recent visits to the Valika Hospital, we ourselves repeatedly witnessed the reuse of used syringes,” he revealed his shocking observation.

Murad wants work on projects expedited severe traffic congestion in district Central.

He reviewed the structural and finishing works. Mayor Wahab informed him that 85pc of physical work had been completed on the Rs3.21 billion project, which features a 6.1-meter-wide dual track.

“People face traffic jams here daily. This underpass must be completed at the earliest,” the CM remarked after inspecting the work.

He directed the Karachi Development Authority (KDA) to carry out round-the-clock work where possible. “I don’t want excuses. Increase your work speed and ensure top-quality materials. Karachi deserves durable infrastructure,” he said, instructing the team to submit weekly progress reports directly to his office.

Addressing project directors and engineers at the sites, Mr Shah reinforced his government’s commitment to improving urban mobility. “Karachi needs fast, safe and modern infrastructure. These projects are not just roads, but they are the backbone of the city’s economy and daily life,” he concluded, directing all executing agencies to eliminate all existing bottlenecks.
